

Funeral objects from the network

We, the Network Identity Experiment Institute, decided to focus on abandoned web pages after the webmaster's death. During a workshop in October 2011 we recycled eleven web pages following the ancestral tradition of placing funeral objects, as a way to accompany the passed soul into the after-life. We tried in the most effective way to transpose this practice to graphical web objects.

This project is dedicated to Carlo Lowfi, net artist 1954 - 2011

Mary Anderson Hardy, designer and developer of this website, passed away unexpectedly on June 15, 2011. We thank her for her creativity, her hundreds of hours of work, and for this site, a labour of love. Heartfelt sympathy to her family.

Note*-It is with great sorrow that we mention that our webmaster passed away earlier this year. It will take some time to find someone to fill his shoes. Your patience is appreciated. A new image will be selected at a later time for the new contest. Please log on from time to time to check on the newest contest image

The Primal Psychotherapy Page

Special Notice: I'm sorry to report that last Wednesday, August 17th, John Speyrer, creator of this website, passed away. John was 79 years old. As many of you know, John has been a long-time supporter of primal, both with his website and with his support of the International Primal Association (IPA). John will be missed by all of us who came to primal as a result of this page, and all of those who have benefited by John's open and friendly forum for articles related to feeling therapy.

As per John's wishes, the IPA will take over the administration of this website. Email sent to this website will now be directed to Larry Schumer, Webmaster for the IPA.

Apple has lost a visionary and creative genius, and the world has lost an amazing human being.» the text read. «Those of us who have been fortunate enough to know and work with Steve have lost a dear friend and an inspiring mentor. ## Postscript

Kyo Yorita, who managed this website, passed away on August 16, 2003, at the age of 71

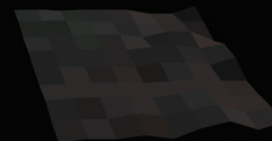

He developed a malignant lymphatic tumor in January, 2002 and was under treatment until his death.

I decided to continue his website of A-bombing memoirs.

My late husband will be pleased if this website helps as many people as possible learn the menace of atomic bombs and the misery of war, and also prompt readers to think about peace.

Carlo Lowfi

Tulga, Mexico, october the 15, 2011
Dear friends and visitors, On the 10th of october, Carlos Andreu Lunez also known as Carlo Lowfi died at the age of 57. He was an internet artist, curator, and webmaster of this website. Some time after his death, we (Carlos' family and friends) managed to find a note about his Internet activity. We found projects descriptions, passwords, artists names and texts about an occupation we couldn't imagine before. Carlos asks me in a note to write this text on this page, he also asks to thank the Webjam community. He was proud of his surfing club Webjam: "Webjam stays as I want it or not, an underground surfing club with talented and anonymous artists. I like the way it evolves, it always surprises me." He wrote last summer in a notebook. We will keep his archives online in honor of his memory. Rest in peace.

The Paw's
Touch

I regret to report that Pepper, the creator of this website, passed away in January of this year. I never had the privilege of meeting Pepper; however, from what I've heard, she was the greatest and is sorely missed. Tony, her partner and best friend, decided that it was time to get the website started back in honor of her memory, so he called a meeting with me and the rest of the new staff. Tony asked me to write this first article, because he's been so busy on the farm chasing mice and keeping the goats straight, he hasn't had the time! Don't worry though, because he will be in charge and you'll be hearing from him real soon!!
